Open access to knowledge is critical—especially during a global health emergency.

Creative Commons calls on organizations around the world to make their patents and copyrights freely available in the fight against the COVID-19 pandemic.

The screenshot shows the OpenStreetMap Wiki page for the 'Open Database License'. The page has a light blue header with navigation links like 'English', 'Create account', and 'Log in'. Below the header, there's a search bar and tabs for 'Discussion', 'Read', 'View source', and 'View history'. The main title 'Open Database License' is prominently displayed. A warning box in the center states that the page can be edited by any registered user and does not represent the views of the OSMF. Below this, the text explains the transition from the Creative Commons license to the Open Database License (ODbL) on September 12, 2012. A sidebar on the left contains links to various wiki features like 'Main Page', 'The map', and 'Tools'. On the right, there are icons for 'Create', 'Adapt', and 'Share'.

OpenStreetMap data is made available for reuse under the Open Database License (ODbL) share-alike license for data. The switch from creative commons license to ODbL took place on 12 September 2012 and followed a lengthy process during which the license was developed. Data published before 12 September is still available under the old CC-BY-SA license. This process was directed by the OpenStreetMap Foundation and documented in their minutes of meetings. The license was developed by the Open Knowledge Foundation.

Most contributors agree to the new terms, however some did not and some 1% of data was lost in the conversion. Considerable efforts have been made by the community to minimise this data loss and to replicate content which was removed.
